

Earn points by answering questions about Japan

Try out City-Cost — you can even use your Japan Times account to log in.

City-Cost

SIGN UP | LOGIN »

The Japan Times
CULTURE

+ MENU

CITY GUIDE

FILM

Film supportive of dolphin drive hunts draws mixed reaction in Montreal

KYODO

PRINT SHARE

ARTICLE HISTORY | SEP 8, 2015

MONTREAL – A documentary supportive of dolphin hunts in western Japan drew a mixed reaction Monday after it was screened at the Montreal World Film Festival in Canada.

Some members of the audience praised director Keiko Yagi for her courage in making “Behind ‘The Cove,’ ” while others dismissed the work as one-sided propaganda.

Yagi filmed the documentary in the town of Taiji, Wakayama Prefecture. She called for “understanding differences in food cultures and religions.”

The Oscar-winning 2009 U.S. film “The Cove” cast an unflattering light on the fishing industry in Taiji by focusing on annual drive hunts that result in the capture or slaughter of many marine mammals at once.

Fishing boats herd dolphins and other small cetaceans into coves, where they are selected for survival or killed, a method that has sparked criticism in Japan and abroad.

“Japanese people tend not to argue back (if criticized), but we can win understanding by sending out messages,” Yagi told the roughly 160 people who viewed her first film.

She stayed in Taiji from August to November in 2014 and interviewed numerous people, including a former whale hunter and conservationist Ric O’Barry, who was featured in “The Cove,” and the film’s director, Louie Psihoyos.

---

PHOTOS

🔍 CLICK TO ENLARGE

---

KEYWORDS

COVE, DOLPHIN, FILM, TAIJI

---

FILM

- ❑ Nagisa Oshima: ‘You have to tell the truth about your country, whatever it is’
- ❑ ‘The Forest’ can’t see the woods for the props
- ❑ Wrestling with Japan’s physically challenged, literally
- ❑ ‘Miss Doc’ shows the struggles of a lone female doctor in rural Japan